

Maja's big day in Gracia

Casa Vicens

Casa Vicens (Catalan pronunciation: [ˈkazə βiˈsɛns]) is a family residence in Barcelona (Catalonia, Spain), designed by Antoni Gaudí and built for industrialist Manuel Vicens. It was Gaudí's first important work. It was added to the UNESCO World Heritage Site "Works of Antoni Gaudí" in 2005. It was built in the period 1883-1889 and is located at Carrer de les Carolines 24, in the Gràcia district of Barcelona. The site was small (smaller today after the widening of the street) compared to similar homes in the area. Nevertheless, the house is sizeable, measuring some 1,160 m² on four levels. This early work exhibits several influences, most notably the Moorish (or Mudéjar) influence, particularly evident at the top. The house is constructed of undressed stone, rough red bricks, and colored ceramic tiles in checkerboard and floral patterns. The owner, Manuel Vicens, was the owner of a brick and tile factory, so the ceramic tiles pay tribute to his business. The yellow, zinnia-flowered tile, designed by Gaudí, was manufactured by Vicens. The plan is asymmetrical with protruding gables and buttresses. Galleries project even farther at the top. Rooftop towers are reminiscent of Moorish architecture. Because the house is a private residence, its interior cannot be visited. Nevertheless, the house is generally open to "neighbours and citizens" on Saint Rita's Day, May 22. In October, 2007, Altadicion, a real estate agency north of Barcelona, announced that they had been given an exclusive contract to sell the Casa Vicens. The asking price was 27 million euros. On 27 March 2014 MoraBanc bought the Casa Vicens in order to open it to the public in 2016.

Full Article ↗ (<https://en.wikipedia.org/?curid=1055410>)

El Camp de l'Arpa del Clot

El Camp de l'Arpa del Clot is a neighborhood in the Sant Martí district of Barcelona, Catalonia (Spain).

Full Article ↗ (<https://en.wikipedia.org/?curid=23242649>)

Can Baró

Can Baró is a neighborhood in the Horta-Guinardó district of Barcelona, Catalonia (Spain).

Full Article ↗ (<https://en.wikipedia.org/?curid=23245060>)
